Asian conflict heats-up

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Chinese troops captured the big town of Lao Cai on the northwestern end of the Vietnamese border Tuesday, but the Vietnamese struck back and thousands of Hanoi troops were reported advancing for a showdown at Lang Son at the eastern end of the frontier.

Japan's Kyodo news service in Peking quoted the Chinese news agency Hsinhua as saying Vietnamese forces shelled the two Chinese border towns of Pinghsiang and Yunyikuan in Kwangsi province Tuesday, heavily damaging part of a railway and a hall built for Sino-Vietnam friendship.

A correspondent for the big Japanese newspaper Asahi Shimbun reported from Land Son, 12 miles from the Chinese border that Vietnamese and Chinese forces were bracing for a major battle in that area.

"Several thousand men of regular and regional units with heavy arms are advancing toward Chinese positions," the correspondent, Kazuhisa Ikawa, reported. "Trucks are hauling 105-millimeter guns from Dong Mo, 60 kilometers — 37 miles from the border."

The account said the main road to the frontier was jammed with vehicles carrying troops, weapons, ammunition and fuel, while refugees moved in the opposite direction.

"Vietnamese 130 millimeter artillery, positioned south of here in Lang Son, is firing toward China," the report said. "Antiaircraft batteries also have been set up."

The Japanese correspondent said only military personnel, security men, government officials and a few civilians were seen in Lang Son, with other residents already having been evacuated. He reported that Vietnamese officials said the number of people left was between 12,000 and 13,000 from a normal population of 46,000.

The Soviet news agency Tass, in a dispatch from Hanoi, reported the fall of Lao Cai, 175 miles northwest of the Vietnamese capital.

As battles raged along the 450-mile Chinese-Vietnamese frontier, there was a flurry of reports that the Chinese were withdrawing or about to withdraw.

Most reports centered on what the dean of the diplomatic corps in Peking, Ambassador Elie J. Boustany of Lebanon, was told in a meeting with a Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister Ho Ying.

But Boustany told The Associated Press in New York by telephone that Ho did not discuss "military information" with him, but merely reaffirmed that the invasion was a limited operation to "teach a lesson" to Hanoi and that China would not hold on to any Vietnamese territory.

The Chinese have not said when they will pull their troops back across the border.

Marxists call protest march

By THOMAS KENT
Associated Press Writer

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — The revolutionary government settled more scores with its enemies Tuesday by executing four more generals of the old regime, but it faced a fresh challenge from Marxist guerrillas who have called a protest march to demand more say in the Iranian government.

Tehran's streets were quiet Tuesday and schools reopened as Khomeini's government continued to consolidate its control. But new political trouble loomed for the 78-year-old leader of the year-long anti-shah rebellion and his provisional government under Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan.

The Peoples Fedayeen guerrillas, a Marxist group that lost hundreds of fighters in years of struggle against the shah, announced it would organize a protest march Thursday to dramatize its demand for more participation in the revolutionary regime.

Spokesmen for the guerrillas said they would march despite Khomeini's ban on demonstrations.

Khomeini said in a radio statement Tuesday night that the planned march was "antireligious" and the work of Communists.

The Fedayeen, an Arabic word for "warriors," are believed to oppose Khomeini's insistence that the new government be basically "Islamic," although Khomeini has not defined what he means by this.

A committee of the National Front political coalition, whose members make up much of Bazargan's cabinet, issued an open letter urging that the Fedayeen and other leftists get a bigger role in the regime.

The four generals were executed by firing squad at 2 a.m. on the roof of Khomeini's headquarters, five days after four other generals were shot. The latest victims of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionary tribunal included Gen. Parvis Amin Afshar, the former commander of the shah's elite Imperial Guard.

Iran's foreign ministry officials issued a statement Tuesday vowing to hound exiled Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi until he can be brought back to Iran for trial. The Tehran newspaper Ettelaat reported a committee had been formed to kidnap the exiled monarch.

Khomeini aides brought out three men they said were the shah's ex-bodyguards, who told reporters they were willing to help in the abduction.

The shah has been in Morocco since shortly after leaving Iran Jan. 16.

State Department officials in Washington said Sgt. Kenneth Kraus, a U.S. Marine guard wounded during a brief takeover of the U.S. Embassy by anti-shah forces last Wednesday, has been in the hands of forces loyal to Khomeini since about two days after he was wounded.

Press officer Richard Undeland said the United States had been assured that Kraus, 22, of Lansdale, Pa., was well.

Carter pushes SALT pact

LANTA (AP) — President Carter ared Tuesday that the turmoil in and Southeast Asia demonstrates atically the need for a new U.S.-t arms treaty, and vowed he will et peripheral issues stand in the of agreement on the pact.

a major pitch for the nearly com- strategic arms limitation treaty, r again cautioned the Russians st meddling in Iran's internal or taking actions that would n the conflict between China and am. However, the president sed that he will press for agree- on the new arms pact — SALT II spite these trouble spots.

is in our national interest to pur- t even as we continue competition the Soviet Union elsewhere in the ," Carter told a friendly audience e Georgia Institute of Technology in his home state.

In a speech billed in advance by presidential aides as a major foreign policy address, Carter repeatedly and strongly rejected demands by conservatives for a foreign policy that would link progress on arms negotiations with the Soviet Union's conduct around the world.

And he told the audience of some 7,000 persons that the emerging SALT II accord "will make the world safer and more secure."

Carter said disturbances and turbulence in Iran, Southeast Asia and elsewhere increase rather than diminish the need for an arms agreement. At the same time, he said, direct or indirect Russian interference in Iran "will have serious consequences and will affect our broader relationship with them."

The president also said the United States is continuing to express "deep concern" over Vietnam's incursion into Cambodia and China's punitive invasion of Vietnam.

Carter said any widening of that conflict, which could result from Soviet intervention on behalf of their Vietnamese allies, might have "unforeseen and grave consequences for nations in the region and also beyond."

The president reiterated, however, that the United States won't intervene in Iran or in "conflicts between Asian communist nations" in Southeast Asia.

Carter was dressed in academic robes as he received Georgia Tech's first honorary doctor of engineering degree.

The president said agreement has been reached on most of the components of the SALT II treaty, but gave no indication when the pact might be signed. The Soviets put off a treaty-signing summit scheduled for last month after Carter extended diplomatic recognition to China. The arms talks have been in limbo since then.

Confirming earlier reports, Carter said the emerging treaty would for the first time allow the Soviets and the United States to have equal numbers of strategic weapons. This would erase the numerical advantage given the Soviets in the SALT I pact signed in 1972.

BYU Security faces authority challenge

By JOHN JESSE
Universe Staff Writer

The authority to deputize BYU Security officers will be challenged in a lawsuit to be filed this week, according to a Provo attorney.

In an article published in Tuesday's Salt Lake Tribune, Ronald R. Stanger said the suit, to be filed in federal court, will argue it is "unlawful delegation of police authority" to deputize the BYU security officers.

Stanger was unavailable for comment late Tuesday night.

Provo Police and Utah County Sheriff offices deputize the officers, Provo City Police Chief Swen Nielson said.

"They are sworn in as special officers," he said. "They have the right to serve warrants and to conceal and carry weapons."

The suit resulted from the arrest of a 24-year-old Provo man by BYU Security, Stanger said. The man, who was not a BYU student, was arrested at BYU Security offices on charges of forcible sexual abuse last Wednesday, he said.

No official statement concerning the arrest or lawsuit was issued from BYU.

"There is nothing that can be said at this point," said Bruce L. Olsen, assistant to BYU President Dallin H. Oaks. "At the point of the lawsuit there may be." He explained BYU will have no comment concerning the arrest made by the BYU security officers and "will just let the legal process take its course."

Ken Kline, spokesman for The American News Agency, a Salt Lake City based homosexual rights group, said the agency provided $1,500 in bail for David Chipman, the individual arrested.

According to a prepared statement issued by Chipman, the incident began when he was contacted by an undercover BYU security officer who set up a meeting to discuss a homosexual relationship. Chipman said he met the officer at the Wilkinson Center. He said they drove up Provo Canyon in Chipman's car.

Chipman said they parked at a rest

Iran conflict, evacuation disrupt church activity

By KEVIN COLE
Asst. News Editor

Kenneth, Kathy and Bonnie Styles sighed and leaned back in their seats aboard a Pam Am military charter flight bound for Frankfurt, Germany Sunday.

Along with 411 fellow passengers, they were leaving behind the turmoil and conflict of Iran. They were also among the last foreign LDS Church members to leave the revolution-torn country.

As they left the heavily-guarded airport in Tehran with about 1,000 other American and British citizens earlier, they were herded and squeezed through a makeshift funnel that Iranian custom officials used to make sure no gold, money or Iranians left the country.

Kathy, a BYU senior majoring in recreation education, and her sister Bonnie had lived in Iran two months and six months respectively. They and their father, Kenneth Styles, were employed by Bell Helicopter International. The company trained Iranian military crews to fly helicopters until the Americans were evacuated.

While Styles remained in Frankfurt to seek employment, Kathy, 23, and Bonnie, 19, continued on to Orem where they are temporarily living with their brother Bill, a BYU sophomore majoring in finance and estate planning.

Flying bullets

"We were scheduled to leave Iran the day before the civil war started (Feb. 12) on a Military Airlift Control flight," Kathy recalled. "But they couldn't get us from the northern part of town where we lived to the southern part of town where the airport was because of the bullets that were flying."

"It was not uncommon to see 14-year-old boys walking the streets with sub-machine guns," Kathy said of the conflict in Iran. "The men would be fighting and the girls would be making Molotov cocktails for them."

LDS Church

Kathy said one reason her family did not leave earlier was because of her father's duties as president of the Tehran branch of the LDS Church. Part of Styles' responsibility was maintaining the three-story, gold-stuccoed apartment building the Church had purchased and remodeled to house the branch chapel, the mission home and mission offices.

BYU English professor Dean B. Farnsworth, who served as the first LDS mission president in Iran from 1975-78, said his two main objectives after being called were to obtain a local entity for the church and a church building.

"In the spring of 1975 there was a disagreement over whether or not the Church itself or the local bishopric would be the local entity," Farnsworth said. "Iran said it had to be the Church itself, saying 'We want to know what you practice, not what you own.' "

Farnsworth said an Armenian lawyer, who had helped several Western churches establish local entity, succeeded in receiving official government recognition of the Mormon church in November 1977.

Kathy and Bonnie Styles relax in their brother's apartment, surrounded by souvenirs they crammed into the two suitcases they were allowed to take from Iran. Kathy, a BYU senior in recreation education, and her sister Bonnie are looking at the Iranian lettering on a hand-painted leather banner; a hand-made stuffed camel sits at Kathy's elbow.

In consultation with the church law department, the Armenian lawyer and government officials agreed to allow Mormons to practice their beliefs and send church representatives to the country.

Future uncertain

William J. Attwooll, who was Iran's second mission president and also reassigned recently to head the new Alabama-Birmingham Mission, said the church's position in Iran is in a sensitive moment.

"It is necessary to retain our legal entity," he said. "The new government will review all legal contracts and proceedings that were issued by the former government. However, there is a question whether any serious legal document with the kingdom of Iran's seal at the top is still valid."

Attwooll said under the former constitution, freedom of religion was interpreted as: "If you are a Moslem, you are free to be a Moslem. If you are a Christain, you are free to be a Christain. If you are a Jew, you are free to be a Jew. But it does not imply the freedom to change religions."

Because of such religious constraint, the 18 missionaries which have served in Iran could not actively proselyte, Attwooll said. "Our mission spread the gospel entirely on referral systems."

According to Farnsworth, the only converts among the Iranian population were in Tehran. "Converts faced social ostracism, possible loss of employment and difficult problems in their social lives," he said.

When Bonnie Styles arrived in Tehran in August of 1978, 250 members — including three Iranian members — were attending branch services, she said. After the troubles started in Tehran, church membership dwindled to 50 by December.

Currently, Kathy believes the only members remaining in Tehran include an Iranian woman who is occupying the church building with her husband, a Korean family awaiting evacuation, and an American woman married to an Iranian citizen.

Meany also vowed to continue to criticize Carter's policies when organized labor disagrees with them. He denied his attacks signify a break with the president and said he and Carter had a pleasant conversation Monday.

Bodies found in Harlem

NEW YORK (AP) — The bodies of seven people, all with their throats slashed, were discovered Tuesday night in a three-story building in Harlem, police said.

There were unconfirmed reports the deaths might be linked to the Rastafarian cult, which is reportedly involved in illicit narcotics activities in the neighborhood.

Police said the bodies of one woman and six men were found at about 7:20 p.m. Identities of the victims were not immediately made public.

Solons pass liquor laws

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Utah House voted Tuesday to decriminalize alcoholism in Utah and to double the state's beer tax.

In other action, the Senate passed a bill designed to keep private Westminster College from closing its doors, at least for another year.

The alcoholism bill would not affect drunken driving laws, but would decriminalize public intoxication. Treatment centers would be set up so alcoholics could be handled in facilities other than county jails.

The beer tax would increase from $3.10 per barrel to $6.20 per barrel, the equivalent of one penny per can.

Police chief stays on

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Salt Lake City Commission voted Tuesday to let E. L. "Bud" Willoughby stay on as police chief but stripped Commissioner Glen Greener of his public safety department post.

"Chipman has never been involved in a homosexual relationship," Kline said. "He made this clear to the officer."

Kline said two BYU security cars who had been following the pair moved in and detained Chipman.

Kline said Chipman was arrested for reckless driving by the BYU security officers but released on his own recognizance.

A warrant for Chipman's arrest on charges of forcible sexual abuse was issued two days later (Feb. 14) by the Wasatch County Justice of the Peace, Dale VanWagner.

VanWagner said the information leading to the issuance of the warrant was supplied by Bill Burke, Wastch County Attorney.

Burke said several BYU security officers provided him with the information required to issue the warrant.

Burke said the case's preliminary hearing has been set for March 16 at the Wasatch County-City courthouse in Heber.

Regulations clarified in ASBYU race

ASBYU candidates can discuss their running for office, but cannot yet publicly announce their candidacy, or solicit votes through the use of graphics until March 1, Suzanne Van Leishout, ASBYU attorney general, said.

Leishout said for at least the last two elections, the rules have been interpreted to mean candidates must keep a "super hush" on news of their entering the elections. She said this clarification is a result of "a different interpretation of the rules."

One function of the attorney general is to interpret the constitution and its bylaws. According to Miss Van Leishout, this interpretation "will allow the candidates more freedom, and help us to know how far they will take it, allowing us to exercise better judgment in the future."

JEFFREY R. HOLLAND ... "Man's task now is of a spiritual nature. No one on earth has any way left but upward."

"One of the first gifts we receive in this world to help us 'upward' is a family," he continued. "Marriage and family are designed to be two of the most basic opportunities in this world where these barriers of selfishness and self-centeredness may be overcome."

Holland pointed out that many in today's world simply leave the scene of conflict when they experience marital differences. "Thus they may never experience what it is to understand a situation from the perspective of another person or to subordinate their own needs to those of others."

The same selfishness which is destroying the family is destroying society, Holland said. "We wish to follow our own star and not be hampered by the glare of any other."

Holland said meaning and fulfillment and joy are not egocentric, and they do not originate in us but lie elsewhere. "We tap that source and cause it to flow to us when we reach out and reach up," he concluded.

Veteran winners head '78 Oscar nominations

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Veteran Oscar winners Ingrid Bergman and Sir Laurence Olivier were nominated for Academy Awards on Tuesday, while two films inspired by the Vietnam War, "The Deer Hunter" and "Coming Home," received a total of 17 nominations.

"The Deer Hunter" tied with the fantasy "Heaven Can Wait" for the most nominations at nine. "Coming Home" scored in eight categories, followed by "Midnight Express" with six and "Interiors" with five.

The nominees for the 51st annual awards of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences will be voted on by the academy's 3,600 voting members, who will start screening the nominated films Saturday.

Miss Bergman won her seventh nomination for her role as Liv Ullmann's pianist mother in Ingmar Bergman's "Autumn Sonata." Twice a winner as best actress and once as supporting actress, she was nominated for best actress of 1978, along with Ellen Burstyn for "Same Time, Next Year"; Jill Clayburgh for "An Unmarried Woman"; Jane Fonda for "Coming Home"; and Geraldine Page for "Interiors."

Olivier has been nominated 11 times, tying with Katharine Hepburn for the academy record. This year he has not only been nominated as best actor for his Nazi-hunting role in "The Boys from Brazil," the academy has also awarded him a special Oscar for his film achievements.

Others nominated Tuesday for best actor: Gary Busey for "The Buddy Holly Story"; Robert De Niro for "The Deer Hunter"; Warren Beatty for "Heaven Can Wait"; and Jon Voight for "Coming Home."

Nominees for best picture: "Coming Home," "The Deer Hunter," "Heaven Can Wait," "Midnight Express" and "An Unmarried Woman."

Nominees for best supporting actress: Maggie Smith for "California Suite"; Dyan Cannon, "Heaven Can Wait"; Penelope Milford, "Coming Home"; Maureen Stapleton, "Interiors"; and Meryl Streep, "The Deer Hunter."

The supporting actor nominees: Bruce Dern, "Coming Home"; Richard Farnsworth, "Comes a Horseman"; John Hurt, "Midnight Express"; Christopher Walken, "The Deer Hunter"; and Jack Warden, "Heaven Can Wait."

UN researcher to lecture at Y

The director of research for the United Nations Institute for Training and Research will be lecturing on campus this week.

Robert S. Jordan, teacher and administrator, will be speaking on "The Value of International Institutions in a Nationalistic World," and on the development of technology.

Thursday's lecture entitled, "Disarmament and Development," will be from 10 to 11 a.m. and Friday's lecture, entitled "Science and Technology for Development," will be from 10 to 11 a.m. The lectures are in 303 JRCB and are open to all faculty and staff.

Jordan, adjunct professor of political science at Columbia University, was a visiting professor lecturing on international politics at BYU in the summer of 1973.

Dr. Ray Hillam, BYU professor of Political Science and International Relations, said Jordan is "an excellent teacher and administrator and a good friend of BYU." Hillam was chairman of the Department of Government when Jordan visited BYU.

Jordan is the author of 11 books, including "Political Leadership in NATO: A Study in Multinational Diplomacy," and "Institutional Responses to Human Needs: A Comparative Assessment of the United Nations Global Conferences."

Among Jordan's honors are Fulbright Scholar at St. Anthony's College, Oxford University; Distinguished Alumnus of Hinckley Institute of Practical Politics, University of Utah; and Faculty Research Fellow at George Washington University and the State University of New York.

He is listed in "Who's Who in America," "American Men and Women of Science" and "Who's Who in the United Nations."

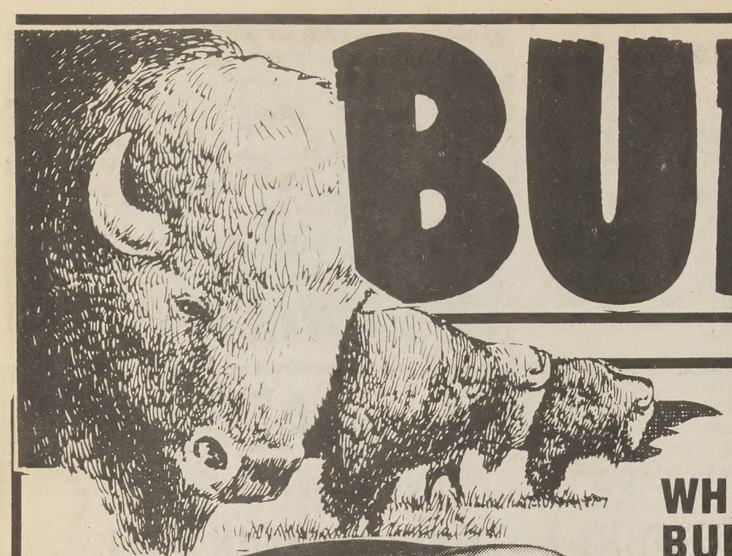
BUFFALO DAYS



WHAT IS BUFFALO MEAT LIKE?

You ask "What's the meat like?" Buffalo cuts are similar to beef and can be cooked much the same way. The taste, too, is often undistinguishable from beef, although buffalo tends to have a fuller, richer flavor.

Football alive and well in Wilkinson Center

By PAUL BOWLER
Universe Sports Writer

Football, one of the hottest sports in the country, is now being played in the Wilkinson Center with all the excitement and intensity the game generates.

The Atari computerized football game, which was acquired by the Games Center last December, has taken over as the most popular game in the ELWC.

The game has four different plays that can be selected: the bomb, a down and out, a sweep, and a keeper. Penalties of offsides, delay of game or a safety can be assessed. It is a game of skill and wit.

The real skill is "to learn how to use the plays and the time on the clock," said Kevin Higginson, a freshman from Heber City, Utah. "It's not like pinball, where anyone can play and win," said Tom Fleming, a freshman from Rochester, Minn. "If you win, it's you and not the machine; that's why it's a challenge."

Two elders from the MTC fought it out for seven minutes. The final score was 28-14. "We come here every P-Day," said Elders Robert Wren and Michael McMillan. "Last week we put in $2.50 and played for 15 minutes. When we got finished we were sweating like we'd played a real football game."

"Everyone comes and plays it," said Colin Forbes, a freshman from Caliente, Nev. "I have this buddy who comes down and puts in $1.50 and I just kick back and play," he said. There does seem to be a "trick" to the game — outmaneuver the opponent and predict what offense he will use.

Atari players say their only complaint about the game is that it is rough on the hands, causing bruises and blisters in a particularly action-paced game.

In relating the experience of two men who came to the game center right after the Atari football games arrived, Shafter Bown, manager of the game center, said he thought of buying Band-Aids and giving one to everyone with callouses.

One not enough

The game center originally leased just one of the Atari football games but, "It didn't take us long to see that with all the people using it, another one would pay for itself in no time," Steve Zollinger, a junior from Idaho, said. Zollinger, who works at the game center, added that he has played the game only once. Before leasing the second machine, Bown said he had students come into his office and tell him that one machine just wouldn't do. "The first day we brought it in I couldn't get near it," Bown said, adding, "I enjoy watching people play; their expressions, and how competitive they are."

Bown said that a grandstand should be built for all the people who stand around. He pointed out that the main purpose for the electronic games is to provide something for the students to do. "The games, and in particular the football game, benefit from the busy bowling lanes, our main drawing card," Bown added. You can walk by the game center anytime and with a listening ear hear such things as, "back, back, now - hit it, hit it, run, run," and "intercepted — all right."

Zambrzycki gains title

Themis Zambrzycki totaled 4,235 points to easily out distance the competition and capture the national AAU indoor pentathlon championship in Saturday's women's track action at the University of Utah. Themis topped 14 other athletes to claim the crown. She already owns the 1978 AIWA pentathlon championship.

Malone may earn top dollar

Moses Malone, who bypassed college basketball after high school five years ago to play for the now-defunct Utah Stars, could become pro sports' first salaried $1 million-a-year player.

Malone, center of the Houston Rockets, is on the verge of being the next dominant force in the National Basketball Association. And his contract expires after next season.

To have a talent like Malone available as a free agent is an opportunity league owners are expected to greet with open checkbooks. A bidding battle is developing that will make baseball's just-concluded war over Pete Rose seem tame by comparison.

With the possible exception of Philadelphia's Daryl Dawkins, there are no other centers of Malone's imposing abilities in sight, either playing in the league now or in college.

Professor Henry Higgins (Jason Dunn) teaches his student, Eliza Doolittle, (Susan Alexander) correct English in BYU's production of My Fair Lady. Tickets for the play, which premiers March 1, are now on sale.

'My Fair Lady'

Tickets on sale for musical

The paradoxical love story of Henry Higgins and Eliza Doolittle will be presented at BYU in a musical-theater production of My Fair Lady. The performance, directed by Preston R. Gledhill, will begin at 8 p.m. in the deJong Concert Hall, HFAC, March 1-3 and 6-10. A special matinee performance is scheduled for March 5 at 4:30 p.m.

The play tells the story of Higgins, a phonetics expert, who transforms Miss Eliza Doolittle, an uncultured woman, into a sophisticated lady. My Fair Lady is adapted from George Bernard Shaw's play Pygmalion.

"Higgins is, of course, the mouthpiece of the author, G.B. Shaw, who left his entire fortune to make a more perfect English speech and spelling," Gledhill said.

Gledhill, director of the production, has taught at BYU for 31 years. He has directed more than 80 stage productions.

Jason Dunn plays the part of Henry Higgins. Dunn has written, directed and composed the music for the original musical, Out On A Limb. He has appeared in such popular television and movie productions as The Brady Bunch, Turning Point, and The Mad Bomber. Dunn is currently studying at BYU in the Master of Fine Arts program of the Department of Theater and Cinematic Arts.

Eliza Doolittle is being played by Susan Alexander, who also played the lead role in BYU's production of Marriage of Figaro last fall. She was a member of BYU's Mormon Players last summer and played the lead role in the musical-theater production of Kiss Me Kate.

Music for the production, co-sponsored by the Department of Theater and Cinematic Arts and the Department of Music, will be directed by K. Newell Dayley.

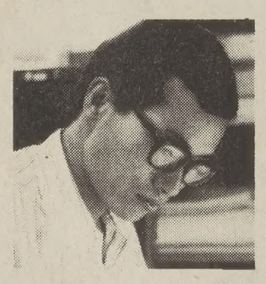
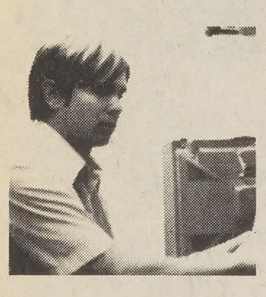
BECOME AN INSTANT PROFESSIONAL

Our students don't wait until they graduate to start doing exciting things in instructional science, and we don't mean just teaching. Take a look below to see if what these students are doing fits your idea of professional involvement. That's not all! Our students get a lot more than a meaningful professional experience and training, they received academic credit and money. Can't beat that!!

Toni Heilman (B.S., Nursing)
Beginning in her first semester in the program, Toni has been conducting a massive redevelopment of Nursing 106 from the bottom up. She has been rewriting course materials to adhere to the nursing conceptual base and developing lesson plan, algorithms, and course materials.



Soo-Young Choi (B.A., Linguistics)
Soo-Young is a member of a team involved in instructional research, develoment, and evaluation in the area of communicative disorders. He has assisted in the development of new ECLI scales to measure pupil and teacher performance.



Griselda Dominguez (B.S., Ciencias de la Educacion)
Griselda served an extended internship (Fall 1977-Spring 1978) on the BYU-Hawaii campus where she worked on the South Pacific and Asian Rim Library & Media Training Needs Assessment, and developed course materials and video tapes for a number of classes (English, Office Management, and Spanish).

Dwaye Rogers (B.A., Philosophy)
Dwayne has been working on the computer monitoring of self-deceptive classroom behaviors in the evaluation of instruction.

Funds on road to allocation

By DEANA LLOYD
Universe Staff Writer

e million dollars in federal funds allocated for Provo City are on their way to being spent.

e Select Committee for the Community Development Block t (CDBG) evaluated suggestions for use of the money sub- d by citizens and assigned priorities Tuesday night. The t Committee will present its recommendations to the City mission during a public hearing next Tuesday.

e top priority program is the replacement of undersized rlines. This means two-inch waterlines in the project areas e replaced with larger ones.

e second use of the CDBG money is curb, gutter and sidewalk . The committee included in this the removal of architectural rers for the handicapped.

e third priority is economic development. The money is to be to encourage new business to come to Provo, according to Madsen, program director.

ast year we accepted the committee's recommendation 100 nt," Provo mayor James E. Ferguson said. "I suspect we will this year's recommendations the same consideration, unless thing comes to light with regards to procedure or a recom- dation is found illegal."

This year's committee reviewed all the recommendations submitted by citizens and rated them according to priority. rated. The ratings for each project were added together and then divided by nine.

During the process of receiving recommendations, the committee was given 22 suggestions to return the money. C. Bruce Jensen, select committee chairman, opposed the CDBG on the grounds that it was part of a redevelopment program rejected by Provo citizens in 1965.

"The redevelopment agency is not connected with the CDBG other than the fact that it is administered by the agency and some consulting funds are spent in redevelopment," Madsen said.

"I am glad to know the citizens' opinion on the CDBG," Mayor Ferguson said. "Since the public hearing, many people have called the city commission. The majority, while concerned about the use of federal funds, are in favor of keeping the CDBG."

"I am happy to see full funding of the CDBG," Mayor Ferguson said earlier. "Provo spend this money differently than most cities."

"We want to make long-lasting improvements," he continued, "We try to improve the areas where they live, making the neighborhoods a nicer place to live."

Geneva may be power source

The possibilities of using a gassification process to break down solid wastes and hydrogen obtained from Geneva Steel for power were discussed Tuesday by the Provo Power Board.

Reginald Wintrell, a representative of Billings Energy Corporation, made a presentation showing what the advantages of such a system could be.

Wintrell said Geneva Steel currently uses its hydrogen to produce ammonia, but because the market for ammonia is decreasing Geneva might be interested in supplying the hydrogen to Provo.

According to Bud L. Bonnet, director of Provo Power, the gas gained from the solid wastes would be used in conjunction with the hydrogen.

Wintrell said if the solid waste system weren't feasible, the hydrogen could be used alone for power generation, but the solid waste facility would be an added advantage to the system.

The Department of Energy has expressed an interest in such developments and might provide aid for the financing of the engineering phase if requested, according to Wintrell.

He said the Energy Department might be interested because of the unique possibilities of a solid waste burning facility combined with the hydrogen supply from Geneva. "I can't see any other city with such possibilities for co-generation," Wintrell said.

Burns & McDonnell, the board's engineering consultants, will contact Billings officials and conduct a study of the feasibility of such a project for supplying future power.

Provo Airport changes policy

A new set of standards for commercial operators was adopted by the Provo Municipal Airport Board Tuesday.

The standards have been revised from an operators' code currently being used at Pangborn Field Airport in Wenatchee, Wash.

After minor adjustments were suggested by board members and fixed base operators, the board established the revised standards as airport policy.

The airport will operate under these modified standards for a period of approximately three months to insure they are workable and to determine if any additional changes to the standards are necessary.

After that time, the standards will be sent to the Provo City Commission to be officially adopted as rules and regulations, according to J. Earl Wignall, Provo City commissioner.

Flea market lecture series features China's emergence in world affairs

By PAMELA MARTIN
Universe Staff Writer

The overall concern of China is to build up national defense and become self-sufficient, Dr. Ray C. Hillam said in opening Tuesday's "Flea Market of Ideas.".

The Market, sponsored by the BYU Honors Program, centered on China as an emerging nation in international affairs, and included six lectures with a panel discussion.

Hillam, professor of political science, said a friendly relationship between China, Japan and America can be advantageous to all parties. Looking to the future, Hillam said he believes America needs to continue a workable relationship with the Chinese, help them with economic problems and avoid causing tension between China and Russia.

He also said we should develop closer relations with Japan, stick with Taiwan and maintain our present military position with Asia.

Dr. Stephen Durrant, assistant professor of Asian and Slavic languages, discussed three areas of continuity in modern and ancient China: an intense concern with history, book worship and the use of writings as a teaching tool.

Durrant said the Chinese have "a deep consciousness of their history." This quality brings the past closer, he said.

Durrant cited one example of an ancient empress, who, when she usurped the throne, wrecked terrible vengeance upon those against her. This is still used today as a basis for withholding authority from women, he said.

Chinese have traditionally placed much credibility on the written word, Durrant said. Chinese leaders, he observed, have from time to time, advised the people only to accept the truth of something written until after it has been investigated.

However, at the same time, words of the leaders are published similar to canonized scripture and the people are expected to know them and live by them, he said.

Durrant said writings created primarily for the sake of teaching are the base of the majority of history and literature in China. The Chinese often memorize volumes of classics which "teach moral lessons," he said

Sechin Jagchid, professor of history, said the Chinese consider themselves superior to all other people, he said. This is revealed in their word for China, meaning "glorious part in the center of the universe." For this reason, they are wary of accepting of other cultures, Jagchid said.

It is done to facilitate modernization, but requires a compromise which will not detract from the basic principles already in force in China today, he said.

Dr. Paul Hyer, professor of history, traced the historical relationship of Westerners and China, including the simultaneous rise of western imperialism and decline of China's dynasties. The market concluded with a panel discussion of reunification of Taiwan and China.

Movie camera stabilizer on display

Steadicam has arrived at BYU and is being demonstrated today in the Wilkinson Center as part of Engineering Week.

Steadicam is an Oscar-winning, body-mounted stabilizing device for movie cameras. It permits the camera to move with the operator as if it were an extension of his own body. The camera is constantly adjusting and correcting itself regardless of body motions.

"Steadicam represents a major breakthrough in innovative mechanical and electronic design," Ed DiGiulio, president of Cinema Products Corporation, said.

The Steadicam system consists essentially of a stabilizer support arm attached to a camera operator's vest at one end, and at the other end to a "floating" camera mounting assembly. This sophisticated engineering allows the camera to move and glide freely in all directions. The camera seems to be free-floating, as if suspended in mid-air.

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences has granted a Class One Scientific or Technical Award to Garrett Brown for the invention of Steadicam — the first such Oscar to be granted by the Academy in 10 years.

Former monk to address alumni

Dr. John S. Staley, former Benedictine monk and now a sociology professor at BYU, will discuss "What's Happening in the Catholic Church" at the Alumni College tonight at 8 in the Bean Life Science Museum theater.

He will base his lecture upon Malachi Martin's book "The Final Conclave" and will review events during the tenure of Pope Paul VI which led to the election of Pope John Paul I.

The former seminarian, who spent 32 years in a Benedictine monastery, will also talk about "the crisis in authority" and problems experienced by the Catholic Church in recruiting for the priesthood during the years of Pope Paul VI. He will complete the picture of Vatican influence worldwide with a review of its political, economic and social effects.

Staley received his bachelors and masters degrees from St. Vincent College, was awarded a second masters degree from Catholic University in sociology in 1950, and 10 years later took his Ph.D. from the University of Pittsburgh.

He served as professor and chairman of the Department of Sociology at St. Vincent College from 1948 to 1968.

1,000th LDS stake formed in Nauvoo

The formulation of the LDS church's 1,000th stake in Nauvoo, Ill. Sunday by President Ezra Taft Benson, of the church's Council of Twelve Apostles, marks the second time in 140 years an LDS stake has borne the name Nauvoo.

President Benson said congregations in the new stake are in Nauvoo, Quincy, Macomb, Canton, Galesburg and Kewanee, Ill.; Burlington, Iowa and Hannibal, Mo. These congregations had been part of the Iowa Des Moines Mission, except for Hannibal, which was in the Columbia Missouri Stake. The new stake will include nearly 2,000 members.

Nauvoo was the site of the fourth stake to be organized after the 1830 founding of the church and was formed Oct. 5, 1839. At that time there were approximately 20,000 members of the church.

According to an LDS church news release it has been nine years since the church's 500th stake was created. If the church continues its present rate of growth, the news release says the total number of stakes will reach 1,100 before the end of this year. The 900th stake was created just 11 months ago, and the 800th just 14 months prior to that. After the church was organized in 1830, 98 years passed before there were 100 stakes in existence, the release said.

China-Vietnam clash: foreign policy lesson

It seems simplistic to relate a major military conflict to fourth-grade teasing, but the situation in Southeast Asia seems like a case of "I'll-go-get-my-big-brother."

China's leaders had been talking about giving Vietnam a bloody nose ever since Hanoi troops overthrew its little brother Pol Pot in Cambodia. And last Saturday the Chinese invaded Vietnam to carry out their threat of punitive action even though the move threatened world peace.

Then there was a real possibility of the Soviet Union entering the conflict to give China a blackeye for picking on little brother Vietnam.

Then to what nation would China turn? The recently befriended United States?

This neighborhood fight of the past few days should provide several good lessons for the United States. First, the Carter administration must recognize that Teng Hsiao-ping has a mind of his own. U.S. officials asked China's vice premier not to attempt an invasion, but their counsel was ignored. Normalization of relations with Peking will in no way increase our influence in Southeast Asia.

President Carter must also take extreme caution in formulating U.S. foreign policy concerning China and the Soviet Union. China appears to be trying to use the United States to hold the Russians in check. And the Soviets fear the formation of an anti-Russia position by China, Japan, United States and Western Europe. If the United States were to try maintaining a secure position by playing off the two communist giants against each other, the results could be unfortunate for everyone. If a conflict developed between China and Russia no one would profit.

The United States should maintain its present attitude toward the China invasion; strongly disapproving of China's actions and persuading the nations involved to prevent the conflict from spreading.

In his speech in Georgia Tuesday, President Carter said this country should not become directly involved as long as U.S. citizens and interests are not directly threatened.

With animosity increasing among some communist nations, Carter must maintain his hands-off policy for intercommunist-nation disputes.

The delicate balance of world peace could not stand the pressure of a heavy-handed U.S. foreign policy.

Carter's joking blunder: no way to make friends

Rosalyn Carter appropriately covered her face in embarrassment when her husband told a tasteless joke while at the dinner table with an elite group of Mexicans and Mexico's president, Jose Lopez Portillo.

A little sensitivity and common sense dictates what is appropiate and inappropiate to say when sharing lunch with a certain group of people. Carter knows "polack jokes" are not to be told in front of Poles. (Translation errors aside) He should realize "Mexican jokes" ought not to be told in Mexico City — especially because the Mexicans are a very sensitive and nationalistic people.

To say he has been the victim of diarrhea is less than appropriate.

No Mexican appreciated President Carter's joke about getting "Montezuma's revenge" while on his last visit to Mexico.

And this is not the first time Carter has not recognized the feelings of nationalism in Mexico. The U.S. turned down the Mexican oil and gas offer two years ago. Washington officials assumed that Mexicans would return and offer to sell their oil cheaper. But the Mexican government was offended instead. No wonder Carter found little sympathy and students chanting "Carter go home" in Mexico City.

On the other hand, Portillo's response to Carter ought to be applauded. Mexico no longer should be seen as a "junior partner" in its treaties with the U.S. He asked Carter, "Where has freedom led us, to concede that we live in a world where a man could buy another human being?"

The United States needs friends. But how can it get them when its president tells "Mexican jokes" at a Mexican table?

It seems that President Carter and his staff need some culture refinement lessons from the Relief Society or the Missionary Training Center to learn proper conduct in a foreign country.

Moderation

Key to environmental debate

Black or white, right or wrong. Too often, environmental matters are looked at this way.

In the frequent battles between environmentalists and entrepreneurs, there's always a winner ... and loser. The land is developed or designated wilderness. Its use is unlimited, or strictly limited. There seems to be no middle trail.

The U.S. Forest Service's Roadless Areas Review and Evaluation (RARE II), released last month, is the same old story. The study recommends that more than 15 million acres, a significant increase, be added to the nation's wilderness system. After minor adjustments, the proposal will be sent to Congress for approval, but not without vigorous objections from both environmental groups and their opponents.

Compromise, though an integral part of governmental process, seems to be thrown out the window when the environment is debated.

Take Utah for instance. More than 3 million acres of the state are under consideration in the RARE II study. A large portion, 2.4 million acres, is recommended for a non-wilderness designation. This would open the land to virtually unlimited use, including mining, timbering and petroleum production. Only a rather modest 500,000 acres will be added as wilderness if the study is adopted.

Still, to hear opposing groups talk, you would think either all of the land under study, or no land at all, was recommended.

Local officials in the state are generally opposed to any wilderness addition. This is in part due to arch-conservative objection to any government "land grabbing." But more valid objections also exist. Many areas, particularly in southern Utah, have direct economic ties to proposed wilderness areas, and would suffer should a "no use" designation be placed on them.

Thus, it was no surprise when the Utah Association of Counties, generally a conservative body, voted to recommend that no wilderness at all be added.

On the other side are conservationists who want to see a much larger percentage of land designated. Economic benefit, they say, is too large a price to pay for permanant damage to valuable land. They are actively lobbying for the inclusion of several other areas considered to be worthy of wilderness labeling.

Somewhere in the middle is the public. A recent survey by the Opinion Research Corporation said in part, "The Utah public appears to consider environmental protection more important than economic growth at the expense of the environment." Citizens generally feel that lands should not be exploited or locked up to an extreme.

In this case, the people appear to be right.

A good ecological program must be based on moderation, allowing maximum benefit for man, without undue harm caused to the environment.

If specific use of an area is an economic need, a "limited use" wilderness area should be created, allowing for only the necessary uses, while not sacrificing other wilderness characteristics.

Creating wilderness areas is not a black or white decision, and steps should be taken toward establishing more realistic standards for land usage.

Letters to the Editor

Loves to be rude

Editor:

I have never seen such a display of rudeness in all my days as a student here on the campus of BYU as at the basketball game Saturday. Can you imagine the thoughts of the people of the University of Utah when we stood up and read newspapers while their team was being introduced? And making a mockery of the U of U fight song? Why, what is this university coming to? And all of those rude and insulting yells we were using to harass their players and their faithful fans who drove all those miles just to see their team take a sound and faithful trouncing?

All I have is just one thing to say to all of those people who came out to the game last Saturday, and about their attitudes is I loved it! That's the spirit! Keep it up!

Facts not easy to find

Editor:

I was intrigued by Mr. Bennett's suggestion that concerned citizens with the Heritage Mountain Resort project "take an hour or two to talk with those in charge of the project so they can get the facts." I'm sorry to say, but that is easier said than done.

When Heritage Mountain was being proposed approximately three years ago, I became interested in the project. My initial reaction was to oppose the project, mostly out of selfish motives I will admit, because I liked the area the way it is. But I decided to "get the facts." I visited a display of the proposed project in the Wilkinson Center and was lucky enough to meet Mr. Williamson, president of Wilderness Associates and chief promoter of the project. I was disappointed though. When confronted by opposing viewpoints, he became extremely rude and defensive and left the distinct impression that all opposing ideas were ridiculous and out of line, not because they were lacking in factual basis, but mostly because they were a threat to him and his project.

Putting this aside as a possible "bad day," I decided to visit the actual area of the proposed resort and see how it looked and what the possible effects might be. With this in mind, I visited the Wilderness Associates office on Center Street in Provo.

To my amazement, I was again confronted by a resentful and very unhelpful attitude. While asking for a map or an indication of the location of various proposed facilities, I was questioned about my attitudes. Finding that I was basically opposed, I was refused any information about the project and was subjected to a tirade about how unfair the Daily Universe and students were being in respect to the Heritage Mountain Project. Apparently, the Daily Universe had run an article on the project and Mr. Williamson was mad about what was said.

It seems that if Mr. Bennett wants us to seek the facts, then Wilderness Associates ought to be willing to provide them, especially to those who may oppose the project. After all, they are the ones who need to be convinced.

Radicalism not noble

Editor:

In one of your latter issues I read in the editorial section an opinion, by an open-minded woman, that we should, in order to truly represent the real existence and uninhibited birth of the modern woman, have a feminist organization on the campus of BYU.

I've also noted that anytime anyone disagrees with such opinions, they are immediately branded as "chauvinist," and thereby relegated to the lower levels of the quality of thought scale. I believe she praised the insight of the book review by Ms. "anti-marriage, anti-man syndrome," giving thanks for the breath of fresh air that someone finally breathed over this "male-dominated" campus. Perhaps we should degenerate the true intent of the recent Women's Conference, which is an objective approach to solving the real problems that women have and establishing some firm ideas of roles they play in life. For the sake of exhibiting an open mind we should have guest lecturers; Bella, Jane, Gloria and Dr. Joyce, come and open our eyes to the truth.

In my opinion those that espouse such radicalism against the nobility of women don't deserve the title.

Labels show ignorance

Editor:

During the six years I've been LDS, when people have inquired about my religious affiliation, and upon my reply, I've often been greeted by a barrage of accusations such as "polygamist," "you don't believe in Jesus," "ah yes, false prophets," "a new Bible," etc. etc. When asking their source of information, they usually cited some obscure minister, biased book, a friend of a friend, or perhaps an apostate saint. As the discussion progressed, I was able to enlighten them as to the true foundation of our church. A bit of correction and clarification normally changed their views, though there will always be those inclined towards closed-mindedness.

During the four months I've been a member of the College Republicans, when students have inquired about my party affiliation, and upon my reply, I've often been greeted by a barrage of accusations such as "Bircher," "radical," "ah yes, big business," etc. etc. When asking their source of information, they usually cited some obscure politician, biased newspaper, a friend of a friend, or perhaps their parents. As the discussion progressed, I was able to enlighten them as to the true foundation of our club. A bit of correction and clarification normally changed their views, though there will always be those inclined towards closed-mindedness.

The College Republicans are an active, ever increasing body of students, concerned about our nation's political climate. Find out for yourself who we are. Our doors are open to all.

Selfishness causes letters

Editor:

Throughout my time here at BYU I've always looked forward to Wednesdays and Fridays so I could pick up a Daily Universe and read the Letters to the Editor. Some have been witty, most have been earnest, and few have been just this side of imbecillity. But almost all have had one thing in common: selfishness.

The majority of these letters are in some way complaints, and complaints indicate problems. All of these problems involve people, and I maintain that the root of all interpersonal problems is selfishness. Sometimes the letters complain of the selfishness of others and other times they reveal the selfishness of the writer himself.

Recently, we had classics of both types. On the one hand Toni Lewis wrote about the selfishness of a huge majority of inconsiderate pedestrians (as one visitor commented, "I've seen smarter cattle"), and on the other hand we have David Guzman who, while trying to expose apparent selfishness on the part of BYU employees, did little but show that he expects everyone to serve the all-important "me." Inconsiderate is by definition not considering the other's viewpoint.

If the student body as a whole were really serious (which, in all hon they aren't) about changing t selves for the better, I would su that a sincere effort to become selfless would eradicate 90 perce all back-page grievances.

Of course, Wednesdays and Fr wouldn't be that much fun...

Runners need rules

Editor:

The indoor track facility o Smith Fieldhouse is being us more members of the student than ever before in its history. T due to the fact that jogging is a p sport with several physical bene

Each week beginners and re run hundreds of miles, aroun around they go, and when they nobody knows. But when they feel that the observance of some traffic rules would be appropriat in the best interest of every safety. Among these rules: slowe fic keeps to the right and faster keeps to the left; walk to the far no sudden stopping on the trac speeding; no rapid lane changing no running in pairs and triple heavy traffic.

So far we have been lucky having any serious accidents track, but with the daily num joggers increasing, who knows will happen. If we all imagine selves as vehicles on a highway sure more common courtesy wo observed.

The non-runners who visit the need to be more careful Sometimes they walk onto the without looking at what is co Many times parents allow their ones to walk in the middle of joggers. I weigh 190 lbs. and ru mph. If I was to hit a little chil knee would probably strike somewhere in the face or head. could be serious or even fatal.

I suggest that we be more siderate and safer. As a resu would all enjoy the great sport o ing more.

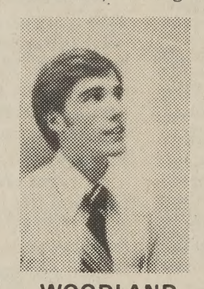
Wall graffiti must remain uncensored



WOODLAND

I consider myself a reasonabl dividual, willing to look at both of an issue tolerate diff lifestyles. In there are few t that really b me. But la there has co my attention thing that s me into parox of rage. It is self-appointed graffiti censor.

Nothing is maddening than to be half through an innocuously scrib message on the wall, only to find paragon of social virtue has bl out: a) the punch-line; b) the insu the obscenity.

Granted, crude and obscene gr hardly have a place at BYU, but fiti to those who love and appreci (ah, New York subways!) can be h entertaining. I can remember to the old days when the south wi the library was being built. Walls vited graffiti decorated the sheet separating the buildings while south wing was being finished. P spent hours wandering down the on the fifth floor, heads tilting t right and left, reading snide comm from Utahns about Californians sarcastic comments from Califor about Utahns. Catchy little d about the general ed program ad the walls, surrounded by epigram professors in general (and a fe specific) and a host of other rel and irrelevant notations.

I miss that wall. We would done well to have placed it in a capsule for later study. It was ma cent.

Since then, however, graffiti at has been forced underground, an here the censor has come, eras hand, to blot out these comment not that I mind so much h someone else legislate my morali it irritates me that the censor g read and enjoy the graffiti, and denies me the same opportunity those whose sensibilities are assa by scrawled sayings, 'the sol seems simple — don't read the At least for the sake of those of u enjoy reading graffiti (and who g with curiosity when part of it is ing) leave the walls alone.
